

HOUSE KUDOS

902 Madison Street

by Jacqueline Frank and Jennifer Nehring

When Paul Ebel, Joe Aprile, Rick Koenig, and Jim Neceda decided to purchase a home together in the Astor Historic District, all four wanted a large home to accommodate their interests and a desire for personal space. The men looked at several homes within the area, but none appealed to them in the way that the home at 902 S. Madison Street did. The three-story home had been cut into three apartments over time as the building changed owners. However, they saw that the home had the space and the "good bones" that they were seeking, and purchased it with the intention of restoring the building to its original brilliance.

It has been 105 years since the home was completed after two years of construction. It has been called the Joannes' House by those familiar with its history, and the Castle by those admiring its size and Chateausque style exterior. Owners date to John Jacob Astor in 1846, who then sold it to John S Horner. In 1894, Mitchell Joannes, an owner of Joannes' Brothers dry goods store on Washington Street, purchased five lots from Olive Sherwood and her daughter, Fannie Gilbert. This tract extended from the corner of Madison and Portlier Streets towards the Fox River.

Five years later Joannes commissioned Henry A. Foeller to design a home that would span two lots of this property. Foeller, founder of a well-known Green Bay architectural firm established in 1895, apprenticed under William Waters, known at the time as one of the most prominent architects in Wisconsin.

The Joannes' home reflected Foeller's skill. As originally built, the Romanesque Queen Anne style interior has a first floor with music, dining, and sitting rooms, a library, butler's pantry and a formal entrance hall with a separate cloak room that contains a waist-level slipper closet for shoes. It also houses a three-story grand staircase of carved oak with similar wainscoting throughout the lower level, as well as ornate wood floors. The second floor originally contained six bedrooms. The third floor contained a ballroom as well as an additional coatroom and other areas for entertaining. In fact, the house was "built for parties," said Paul Ebel, as it could easily accommodate both guests and servants, and often did while the Joannes' family lived there.

Over the years three portions of the property were sold, beginning in 1926 when J.M. Conway gained possession of the carriage house which was reconstructed as a home and is now located at 915 S. Jefferson Street. The home was also divided into apartments. When Joannes' daughter Arleen married Dr. Arthur J. McCarey in 1919, an addition to the west side of the building was made. The existing building was then divided, forming two households for the Joannes and McCarey families. By the time the house was sold in 2006, a wall had been built at the top of the grand staircase, a section of the back apartment had been made into a hall leading to the back staircase, and the ballroom was converted into a third apartment.

Since the most recent sale, Paul, Joe, Rick, and Jim have worked extensively to bring the home back to its original state. Paul is by trade a designer specializing in residential and health care interiors as part of his business, Ebel Gentile Interiors, Inc. The changes have been largely by his design and love of working with homes in the neighborhood. To date, work on his own home has focused on the exterior, including painting the exterior trim a deep chocolate brown to highlight the leaded glass windows, a new roof, copper gutter work featuring dragon water spouts, a lush evergreen garden and the addition of detailed exterior lighting over the entrance.

The four owners have removed many of the walls that transformed the home into a multi-family dwelling, and plan to update electrical and heating systems over the fall and winter. Future projects include a complete update of the kitchen and restoration of the butler's pantry. Paul plans to work from the third floor to the first, allowing the upper story to be used for entertaining once again. Most rooms will be redecorated in a way both tasteful and suitable to the historic structure, including using appropriate, historically reminiscent lighting, colors, and other details. Other rooms will be updated to accommodate modern needs, such as the addition of a washer/dryer to the furnace room on the second floor.

Through Paul's vision and the dedication of Rick, Joe, and Jim, the home will once again be used as it was built, with a full, functional restoration. They all deserve a "Thank you" for the work that truly represents the best of the Astor Historic District.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Over the past few years, the Astor Neighborhood Association has provided numerous social events to bring together our neighbors, we have volunteered within the neighborhood and community, and we have worked to increase lines of communication throughout our neighborhood. However, at a recent meeting of the board, two neighborhood components were identified as needing renewed focus by the association board: neighborhood safety and historic preservation.

The safety we feel as we walk through our neighborhood and the safety of our children should not ever be taken for granted. Participating in Project Porchlight (there are still a few lights left – contact me) and our being mindful of our driving habits as we drive through the city are just two ways to boost safety. If you have other ideas, contact a board member. Better yet, get involved to help find out ways to implement your ideas.

Historic preservation has always been an integral part of the ANA; it's a key component of our mission. When historic preservation and social events mix, such as during the wine tasting, the events are wildly popular (last year the wine tasting event sold out, so this year, get your tickets early). But are there other ways that we can stress this part of our neighborhood, such as lectures about how best to renovate a historical home or developing a network of contractors who specialize in older home restoration?

As we continue to plan and execute social events and try to bring a renewed sense of safety and historical preservation to the board and the neighborhood, it is through your support, ideas, and involvement that we can move forward, follow through, and continue with our successes as a neighborhood.

Christmas Memories

by Jessie Sharp

What were your first memories of Christmas? In 1971 I was four years old; I lived in a small house on an island a short drive across a bridge from St Petersburg, FL. I remember my mom told me that Santa Claus delivered toys to all the boys in girls in a speed boat. I remember watching Christmas boat parades and seeing palm trees decorated with Christmas lights. These are my first memories of Christmas.

When I started high school my family moved to New Orleans. Kids in New Orleans grow up watching huge bonfires on the Mississippi river levees that light the way for Papa Noel. Instead of a sleigh and reindeer, Papa Noel is often depicted in a boat in the middle of a swamp being pulled by a host of alligators. (search "Papa Noel" on amazon.com)

Five years ago my wife and I moved to Green Bay and we wondered what special Christmas traditions they practiced in packerland. Christmas trees carved out of cheese? Stocking stuffed with bratwurst? Santa delivering presents in a snow plow? In fact we were in for a lovely surprise; simple but beautiful luminaries decorating elegant old houses in our neighborhood. We knew it would be a tradition that we would look forward to every year.

Like I was in 1971, our oldest child is now four; this year will likely be the first memories of Christmas that will last her lifetime. I wonder what she will remember. I hope that one of her memories will be of the luminaries that light the sidewalks in our neighborhood. In an age that many have forgotten the traditions of the past, it will be a wonderful for her to remember the elegance of simple luminaries in front of beautiful old houses.

Please join your neighbors this year in celebrating this Astor Park tradition.

Here's how: Luminaries can be as simple as a brown paper bag filled with a little sand or kitty litter and votive candle. But there are many more ideas. For a no flame version you can use electric luminaries or even battery powered luminaries. For one of the more elaborate versions you can make ice luminaries. Other options include flame retardant bags or painted tin cans punched with creative designs.

Neighbors Helping Neighbors

Do you need someone to shovel the sidewalk during the wintertime? Would you be willing to rake leaves for a neighbor who cannot? One of the ways the Astor Neighborhood Association would like to strengthen our "neighborly" bonds is to connect the people in our neighborhood with needs to those in our neighborhood that can help them. Jacqueline Frank, one of the newest board members, has offered to oversee a "Neighbors Helping Neighbors" program. As she develops a "need" pool and a "help" pool, she will be able to give volunteers assignments that meets the needs of others. So if you are willing to help out and join the volunteer pool, please contact Jacqueline at 445-0402 or email her at jdfank@nationalrrmuseum.org to let her some of the activities that you will participate in. Additionally, if you have any needs (raking, shoveling, picking up groceries) that the program can fulfill, please contact her, as well. She will do her best to find someone to help out.
